The Question at the Heart of Christianity March 22, 2019 by: Matthew Barrett. Right With God. There’s a famous saying that goes something like this: “The doctrine of justification is the doctrine on which the church stands or falls.” Many think the Reformers actually said this, but it’s not true. It came later after the Reformation.

For me, the heart of Christianity--Christian fundamentals for our time--would be, first, the reality of God. Without a robust affirmation of the reality of God, Christianity makes little important sense. Secondly, the centrality of the Bible. To be Christian is to be in a continuing, ongoing conversation with our sacred scriptures.
