That's why they attribute unconditional love for all mankind to God. It's why Christ commands Christians to love thy neighbor as thyself. But, of course, unconditional love is easy for God -- with his infinite patience and boundless capacity to forgive. You can't hurt God - not really. But humans are vulnerable.

About Unconditional Love. Life is a teacher, something I talked about in episode 87 of the podcast, and so it's always trying to open up our awareness and perspective so that we can amend the assumptions, judgements, stories and yes, expectations that are holding us back from being in fulfilling relationships that reflect the truest version of us.

About Unconditional Love - Baggage Reclaim with Natalie Lue

Setting aside Empedocles's view of Eros as the force binding the world together, the roots of the classical philosophy of love go back to Plato's Symposium. Plato's Symposium digs deeper into the idea of love and bringing different interpretations and points of view in order to define love.

Listening Notes. Unconditional love is the highest form of love, says Ken - most religions recognize this too, hence why they attribute unconditional love from man to God. If God existed, says John, then unconditional love would be easy for him/her, given the corresponding infinite patience and ability to forgive. But humans are not like that.
