Hard skills should be worked in throughout your resume. Including a skills section on your resume isn't a requirement, but it can help you have a natural place to list skills that are important to the job for which you're applying. A dedicated skills section also makes your resume more skimmable for recruiters trying to quickly identify whether you meet their requirements.

1. You will write more than one resume, targeting each one at a specific audience. This is the golden rule of resume writing. You must tailor each resume for every position that you are applying for. For instance, let's assume you're applying to become a waiter, a secretary, a construction worker, or a salesperson. (Note: Click those links to view a WELL TARGETED resume sample).
